

ORAL HISTORY INTERVIEW AGREEMENT

Equal Terms

An Oral History Project on Education in Greater LA

May 17, 2004 marks the 50th anniversary of Brown v Board of Education, the Supreme Court decision that promised education on “equal terms.” This year, UCLA’s Institute for Democracy, Education, and Access (IDEA) is working with local teachers to explore how Brown’s promise has played out across Los Angeles. Young people and parents will conduct oral histories with long-time Los Angeles-area residents about the conditions of their schools and the struggles of their communities for educational justice. Students and parents will present these oral histories at school, on the internet, and at community forums around greater Los Angeles.

We would like permission to interview you and use your interview for this project. By participating in this project, you will contribute your voice to an important public conversation about Los Angeles’ history and the need for high quality, equitable schooling today.

I grant my permission for students and parents affiliated with the Equal Terms Project of UCLA’s IDEA to interview me and use my interview for their public history project. I understand the UCLA’s IDEA will share these interviews with a variety of audiences through the internet, at public forums, and in print.
